Agatha took him home, at the sight of her husband. As the days go by and Mrs. Cummings Browne avoids her and sees that she is full of blues, Agatha suspects that something serious is going on. She asked Mrs. Cummings Browne what had happened in the last few days and then wished he would disappear because he had never hit her before. So she prepares a quiche and takes it to Mrs. Cummings Browne, telling her clearly that it is poisoned and that she must give it to her husband so that he can disappear.

In anger, Mrs. Cummings Browne - "I'm going to give it to him so he can disappear forever."

When she comes home with the quiche, she uses the fact that the quiche is from her and that the children are coming for dinner as an excuse.

Mr. Cummings Browne couldn't wait any longer and so ate the whole quiche. He succumbed to the poisoning and stayed there. Following his death, caught in a deep sadness, went to Agatha. When she went there without her being there, she discovered a photo of her and her deceased husband. She finally understands that she has been manipulated. Angered and overwhelmed by remorse, she went and confessed everything to the police. She gives the exact location of Agatha and the police went against her. Having neither time to prepare nor to leave, while seeing the inaccessibility to freedom, she put an end to her life.
